Re: *Camp Lejeune Water Litigation – National Personnel Records Center (NPRC)

Counsel:

This letter is in response to Plaintiffs' request to have their researchers on-site at the National Personnel Records Center (NPRC) in St. Louis, MO to review and scan military service records for the Camp Lejeune Justice Act (CLJA) litigation.

For the past several months, the Department of Justice (DOJ) has coordinated with multiple federal agencies to streamline the request, digitization, and production of agency records including military service records for the CLJA litigation. As part of this streamlined record process and at the request of DOJ, specialized contractors hired by the Department of Veteran Affairs (VA) scan non-digitized military service records stored at the NPRC.

Plaintiffs' request does not account for the numerous complexities involved with military service records. First, there is not enough room onsite at the NPRC for Plaintiff to conduct scanning operations. Second, there is only one copy of the non-digitized military service records. Plaintiffs and the United States cannot access these records at the same time. Third, these records are fragile, and the VA's contractor meets the stringent archival handling standards of the National Archives and Record Administration (NARA). Fourth, service military records are not owned by NARA until sixty-two years have passed since the service member's last date of service. Prior to this time range, these records are stored at the NPRC, but are owned by the military service departments and their permission is required for access.

Given this, the NPRC prefers that Plaintiffs use DOJ's streamlined record process to gain access to military service records for the CLJA litigation.

Sincerely,

/s/ Cindy M. Hurt
